Showcasing Jacqueline Woodson

by Martha Sibert

This year, Jacqueline Woodson added a MacArthur Fellowship to her impressive list of awards and honors. The Fellowship, informally called a “Genius Grant,” is designed to recognize exceptionally creative individuals and empower them to continue their work. Over the last thirty years, Woodson has written fiction, poetry, and informational books, including titles for all age groups, from young children through adults. She received the prestigious MacArthur grant for “[r]edefining children’s and young adult literature to encompass more complex issues and reflect the lives of Black children, teenagers, and families.”

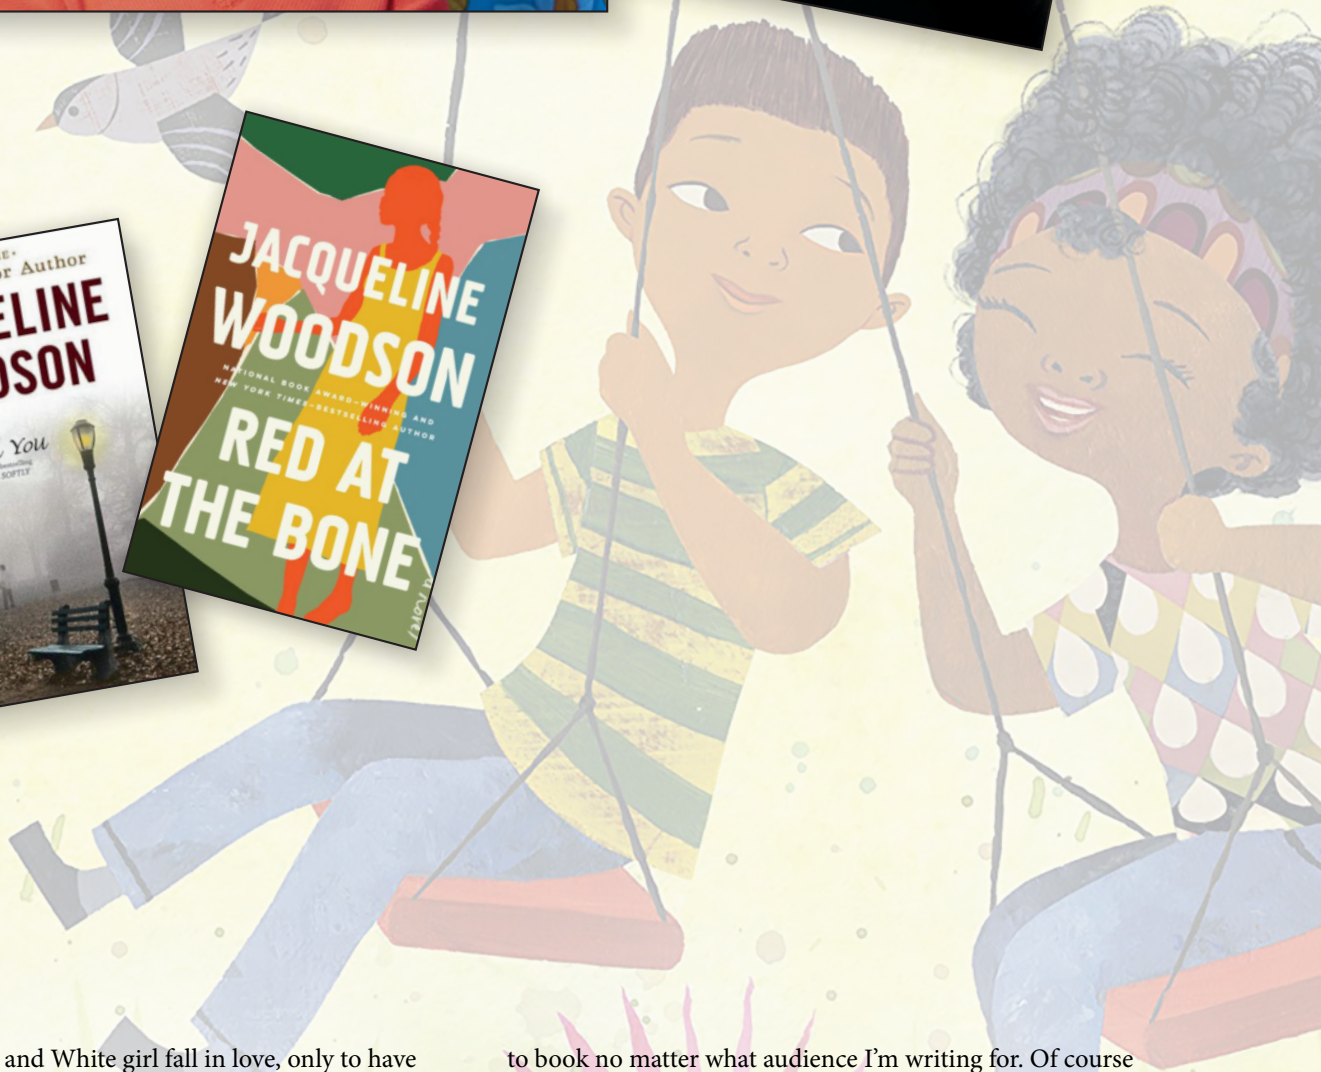

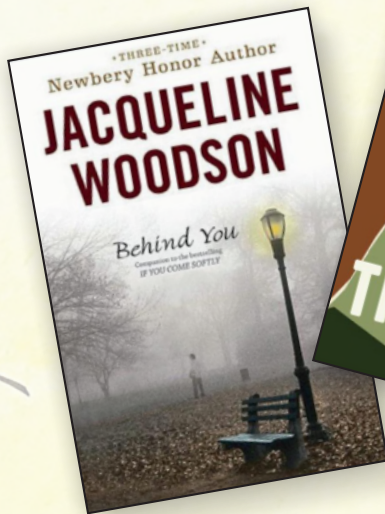

Woodson’s storytelling explores these complex issues through the eyes of diverse, sensitively drawn characters. Her most recent novel, Before the Ever After (2020), focuses on CTE (chronic traumatic encephalopathy), or brain damage resulting from head trauma. Set in the time before the connection between CTE and football was fully understood, the story is evocatively told in verse from the point of view of ZJ, whose beloved father Zachariah is a famous football star. ZJ and his family must find a way to cope with loss and change, as Zachariah begins to suffer from CTE.

Why this topic? “I’d seen the damage done and hadn’t seen it written about. Football is a complicated and beautiful game. I always say I write because I have questions, not answers, and writing Before the Ever After helped me get at the heart of some of what I was grappling with around what happens to the bodies involved in the game, about what it means to show up, to be a good dad, to be a good son, to be a family.”

Woodson also used verse to tell her own story in Brown Girl Dreaming (2014). This powerful memoir about growing up in South Carolina and Brooklyn won the National Book Award for Young People’s Literature, among other honors. Is she surprised at the enthusiastic reception for her very personal memoir? “Every day! I struggled so with the question of ‘Will anyone but me be interested in this book?!’ I was and still am stunned at its reception. And grateful.”

When asked which of her books resonates as much today as it did when it was first published, Woodson has a ready answer: “If You Come Softly, hands down. I mean, I hope they all resonate, but looking at what we’re dealing with today and how a book I wrote back in the ’90s spoke to this moment, it is definitely the first one that comes to mind.” In this young adult novel, a Black boy and White girl fall in love, only to have their story cut short by a senseless police shooting. The sequel, Behind You (2004), follows the book's characters as they face life after the shooting. In 2018, in the midst of the Black Lives Matter movement, Penguin Random House highlighted the novel's continuing relevance by publishing a 20th Anniversary Edition, with a new preface by the author.

Woodson describes her path to becoming a writer in one word: "writing." For her, the process is essentially the same, whether she's writing a picture book or an adult novel. "I don't truly know how the process differs—writing is writing. The voices are different. The tone. But that's the case book to book no matter what audience I'm writing for. Of course the adult books feature older characters as protagonists." She does "A LOT" of self-editing as she goes along, and editors play an important role in the process as well. "My editors have always been great. They see where I'm trying to go and ask the questions that help me get there."

What's next? Audiences of all ages will continue to hear from Jacqueline Woodson. A new picture book is coming out soon, and she's at work on a middle grade book and a nonfiction title for adults. As for ventures into other media, she recently completed a screenplay for her adult novel Red at the Bone (2019), as well as a pilot for a TV series based on Behind You.

Save the Earth Use Paper!

You've seen the strident message – “Go Green, Go Paperless!”, “Go Paperless, Save a Tree!”, and countless variations – in all kinds of advertising and on websites. But is this slogan an honest, scientifically based suggestion or is this a much more complicated issue?

The companies in the paper and printing industry got tired of the bad rap paper was getting in these messages and started an organization, Two Sides NA, to collect and disseminate some facts in defense of the use of paper. They make a point to approach large companies that urge their customers to go paperless, confront them with the facts about the production and use of paper, and try to get them to change their anti-paper marketing. They have been quite successful recently in getting companies to comply.

Since paper is made from trees does that mean that using paper destroys trees? Or doesn't it mean that thanks to the paper industry large portions of our planet are covered by forests, rather than the cornfields or shopping malls that would take up that land if the paper companies did not need it? It is true that paper production requires some electricity but how much more electricity is required to run the digital devices and the data networks that the paperless alternative requires? Isn't paper one of the most recycled consumer products in the world, as opposed to computers and digital equipment?

What exactly are the motivations behind the paperless advocates? Are the companies urging you to go paperless trying to save themselves the costs of printing and mailing invoices and statements or are they only worried about the planet? Is Amazon trying to build their dominant position in the ebook market when they tell you how much greener it is to read an ebook instead of a print book? Has anybody considered the serious cybercrime and security issues that we are faced with before urging us to do all our transactions online?

These issues are relevant to educators as well as to consumers. How many school districts are pushing ebooks, a digital curriculum, online testing and all the elements of a virtual school, at least partially on the basis of environmental and cost saving benefits that might not exist? Some studies are suggesting that there are cognitive, educational benefits to reading and writing on paper that are lost when a school goes high tech. It is often assumed that today's children are “digital natives” and prefer to do everything online. But there are now studies being done that show this is not true and that even digital natives prefer reading on paper in many situations.

Go to www.twosidesna.org to find the latest research, all kinds of information about how paper is produced and the benefits of paper vs. digital. Of course, all the information is available in a printed format as well!

Opening a New Library?

The image shows a bright, modern library interior. A large curved wall with floor-to-ceiling windows dominates the left side, offering a view of a parking lot with several cars. The room is furnished with dark wood shelving units arranged in a semi-circle. There are several colorful armchairs and small tables, including a red one, a purple one, and a green one. A patterned carpet covers the floor. The overall atmosphere is clean, organized, and inviting.
