In January, 1920, Lawrence Sibert started a company with the express purpose of prebinding books for schools and libraries, thereby extending the life of their children's collections at a reasonable cost. Today this third generation family owned business continues the mission, and with the aid of 21st century technology, provides the best juvenile books, media products and related services to the libraries of North America and beyond.

The BTSB mission is to provide, through constant improvement, the best juvenile books, media products and related services to the libraries of North America, as closely matched to their needs as possible and as economically as possible.

Bound to Stay Bound works with all the major U.S. publishers to provide highly reviewed, recommended, and high circulating titles in a superior quality prebound format to last hundreds of circulations. This allows libraries to build a quality collection rather than spending annual budget money to maintain their collection by replacing books that fall apart year after year. There is a definite need for different types of bindings in libraries.

100 YEARS LATER . . .

We are still all about quality, service, value, customer satisfaction, and the kids!

Features

Showcasing Jon Klassen

Jon Klassen and Mac Barnett have worked together on quite a few books. So who better to explain Jon to us than Mac? "Jon is – and I bet always has been – a serious moral thinker and a deeply funny person."

Showcasing Joyce Sidman

Joyce Sidman is a poet celebrating nature. However she never saw herself as a scientist because she felt she had "neither the discipline nor the patience to be a scientist".

Showcasing Mac Barnett

Jon Klassen and Mac Barnett have worked together on quite a few books. So who better to explain Mac to us than Jon? Jon observes "Every now and then I'll think 'This isn't going to work, kids won't get it' and he'll say 'They'll get it' and they always do."

Jon Klassen and Mac Barnett have worked together on quite a few books, such as Sam & Dave Dig a Hole; The Wolf, the Duck, & the Mouse; Triangle; Square; and Circle. So who better to explain Jon to us than Mac? They have worked together since they met at a party their literary agent, Steve Malk, hosted. They found that they were both obsessed with the classic children's books by Arnold Lobel about Frog and Toad and they still love to talk about them.

Mac and Jon agree that the other fellow has a very well-developed knowledge of picture books both past and present. Mac remembers stories Jon told him about his mother hauling him on a sled through Canadian snowdrifts to get to the public library and the wonderful collection of old picture books that he would peruse on his grandparents' bookshelves. Apparently the two of them discuss children's books beyond just Frog and Toad when they get together!

Mac believes Jon is a very unusual mix of two disparate tendencies and that's what makes his children's books so unique. "Jon is – and I bet always has been – a serious moral thinker and a deeply funny person." Thus his books tend to deliver a very serious message but they are wrapped up in a very humorous package. The other unusual aspects of Jon's character are that he wears a baseball cap virtually 365 days a year and, as Mac reports, "Jon doesn't really do impressions, but he has a killer Clint Eastwood."

Jon is perhaps also a unique character in Mac's eyes because of the varied individuals Jon has drawn inspiration from, at least as Mac sees it. These include the filmmakers Alfred Hitchcock and Stanley Kubrick, the great Canadian artist David Milne, the great American novelist Cormac McCarthy, and the English picture book illustrator Pat Hutchins. The artists are perhaps not so surprising but the moviemakers and the novelist probably reflects Mac's views on what goes on in a good picture book. It is certainly not just the pictures! "In a good picture book, the words and the pictures should be so tangled up that distinguishing between them is folly."

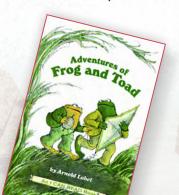

Square ran after Triangle, past small squares and medium squares and big squares.

It appears that the only cause for disagreement within the finely oiled team of Barnett and Klassen is that they don't agree about who is the more popular one at their joint book signings. Mac believes it is Jon but Jon claims it is Mac because he does most of the talking! However, they both agree that Mac always gets his work turned in on their books first.

Unfortunately, Jon and Mac don't have another book together in the works presently. But Mac Barnett is currently working on a book with Carson Ellis. No doubt, given Ellis's whimsical and weird pictures in her Du Iz Tak? and Home, her collaboration with Mac will produce something notable.

Joyce Sidman is a poet celebrating nature. She started out at a young age fascinated with verse and with the miracles of the natural world. However she never saw herself as a scientist because she felt she had "neither the discipline nor the patience to be a scientist". So her poetry became the medium and science became her subject. Then, when she had children of her own, she found her audience. Children are "so willing to be curious and attentive and amazed."

Ironically, one of the biggest boosts along the way toward becoming a professional poet was learning German in college. She had always just written in English instinctively from growing up with it. However, "the study of German opened my eyes to the workings of grammar, and how different languages put together sentences in different ways." She has also learned to adapt the various forms and types of poetry so that they will better match the subject of the poem. This means that as she writes about different creatures or facets of nature, she is writing about them with very different types of poetry. She has a form she calls "mask poems" and she wrote the book Butterfly Eyes with poetry in the form of riddles.

Sidman's latest book, the Sibert-award winner The Girl Who Drew Butterflies, is the ultimate stylistic leap for her—she abandoned poetry for prose! Her interest in the medieval naturalist Maria Merian was piqued by an exhibit at the Minneapolis Institute of Art in 2008 so the book was 10 years in the making. It was a great deal of research but the writing was a bit less demanding. As Joyce puts it, "it was a relief to work on nonfiction—to sit down and know what I needed to write, instead of conjuring up poems out of the thin air of imagination."

Her next book will go back to poetry. It is entitled Dear Treefrog and will publish in Spring 2021. "In Treefrog, I'm exploring loneliness, growing awareness, and the joy of finding a kindred spirit." Dear Treefrog will be illustrated by Diana Sudyka. She has not illustrated a Sidman title previously but she is known as an up-and-coming artist.

Joyce Sidman's well-written books have been blessed with excellent illustrators for her whole career. Joyce credits her editor, Ann Rider, at Houghton Mifflin with finding illustrators to interpret her poetry. "Ann has the ability to visualize how my text might be augmented with illustrations —how it might become a book. She's what I call the boss of the book." One exception to this was when Joyce and Beth Krommes set out together to try to create a book about spirals and created Swirl by Swirl. But normally the text comes first.

Joyce has definitely got several younger age science poetry books in the works, but if a great subject like Maria Merian comes along she would not be averse to another straight nonfiction book. Or, as she says, "I might do something completely different. The future is wide open right now!"

SHOWCASING Mac Barnett by Jon Klassen

Jon Klassen and Mac Barnett have worked together on quite a few books, such as Sam & Dave Dig a Hole; The Wolf, the Duck, & the Mouse; Triangle; Square; and Circle. So who better to explain Mac to us than Jon? They have worked together since they met at a party their literary agent, Steve Malk, hosted. They found that they were both obsessed with the classic children's books by Arnold Lobel about Frog and Toad and they still love to talk about them.

Jon feels that the keys to Mac's success with children's books is his deep knowledge and study of picture books in the past and in the present, and his empathic understanding of what makes young readers tick. This knowledge about young readers was hard-won information gained by working as a camp counselor as a young man. Jon observes "Every now and then I'll think 'This isn't going to work, kids won't get it' and he'll say 'They'll get it' and they always do". Jon believes one of the big influences on Mac when he was young was reading the outrageously funny picture books of Jon Scieszka. Mac has been able to capture the feeling young readers get from Scieszka's books, and from other great authors like Mo Willems and Dav Pilkey, that they are having just as much fun writing what they write as the young readers are having reading what they write. Mac has also gone back into the distant past of picture books to understand what made the books of Margaret Wise Brown, Wanda Gag, and Ruth Krauss work so well so he could apply those lessons to his own work.

As the illustrator, Jon has resigned himself to the role of quiet straight man at their book signings and appearances, while Mac, as the author, is the front man. In fact, "If I wasn't the handsomer one I don't think anyone would even want me to sign their books at all." Also, as the illustrator, Jon finds that Mac always gets his part of the book turned in first while he struggles with his deadlines for the drawings. As he puts it, "Mac always has his work done and handed in with time to walk his dog before dinner."

You would expect Jon Klassen, as an illustrator, to believe that the illustrations are the most important part of picture books. However, he is quick to say how important the writing is. "What Mac and I both like is when the words and the pictures have separate and important jobs in telling the story... If we were going to measure very carefully we would probably find that the pictures were a few small percentage points more important, but only a few."

At the moment, there is not another collaboration between Barnett and Klassen in the works. But, in between conversations about Frog and Toad, they have some things percolating and surely it won't be long before another picture book appears!

Dewey® Decimal Signage Now Available In Four Age Groups

Dewey Decimal Signage For Elementary Readers

Dewey Decimal Signage For Intermediate Readers

Dewey Decimal Signage For Older Readers

These eye-catching, vibrant posters help to inform library visitors about the Dewey® Decimal Classification System.

The mini posters (8.5" X 11") highlight the Dewey Decimal ranges by 100's and visualize main topics found under some of the more common group classifications.

The large poster (12.5" X 20.5") showcases all the groups on one poster.

Ideal for the ends of bookshelves.

Packet contains two copies of the large poster and the 10 individual mini posters.

All posters are laminated.
