Features

Showcasing Kevin Henkes

Kevin says, "his most wonderful memories are those of walking into a big room filled with young children wearing handmade mouse ears in honor of my books. It always takes my breath away."

Showcasing Andy Griffiths

Griffiths attributes his popularity to several factors. First, "the books combine elements of three genres: fantasy, comedy and adventure which is reflected in both the text and pictures." At the same time, they have "complicated plots with lots of action and adventure."

Showcasing Christian Robinson

Recalling his childhood he says, "Creativity was my way of escaping and processing the world around me, and gave me some say in what the world could look like, at least on a piece of paper."

Collection Analysis Utilizing SmartSearch®

Use SmartSearch® Tool to create library book collections that are balanced, appropriate, and support the curriculum and intellectual needs of your students and your school.

The SmartSearch® Tool offers the most advanced book collection development currently available. You can upload and analyze your school's book collection, and then find the best books that you require for your specific library.

SmartSearch® Tool can be used to create a 5-year plan for developing a book collection that your students and school needs. It also has the tools for developing various charts and budgets to present to your school community to get the funding you will need to achieve your goals.

Once your collection is uploaded, you can search the BTSB database to find the books you need to balance your collection or to fit a specific budget.

Start using the SmartSearch® Tool by logging in to your BTSB Bookstore account – My Bookstore – Collections

Author/Illustrator

Kevin Henkes has had a long career as a writer-illustrator of children's books. With titles like Kitten's First Full Moon and Lilly's Purple Plastic Purse he has captured the imagination of generations of children. As a recipient of the Caldecott Award and Newbery Medal Honors, he has built an impressive resume over the three decades that span his work.

As a child himself, Kevin fondly remembers reading Harry the Dirty Dog, by Gene Zion and Margaret Bly Graham, The Little Fish that Got Away by Bernadine Cook and Crockett Johnson and Rain Makes Applesauce by Julian Scheer and Marvin Bileck. Most impactful however was the book Is This You? by Ruth Krauss and Crockett Johnson that he described as "essentially a guide for making a book of one's own." It is these books along with a love of art and reading that paved the path for thirty years of writing and illustrating his expansive bibliography, 55 books in all. Imagine having such an impactful inspiration as a kid that it created a lifelong career path as this is the only job Kevin has ever had.

Over the years, Kevin has been able to incorporate family into his career by collaborating with his wife, Laura Dronzek, a painter and award-winning children's book illustrator. He speaks fondly of their collaborative efforts and explains that it all works because of the mutual trust they have between each other. Luckily, it transferred from personal to a professional collaboration beautifully. He enjoys bearing witness to seeing things as they progress while working together.

Although Kevin doesn't, as a normal course of action, draw on his family and friends to model characters in his books, Laura will, on occasion, pose for him so he can refine a proper body position for a particular illustration while avoiding capturing any of her likeness. He even returns the favor for her, continuing that sense of collaboration between them. He has however, in one book, used his children as inspiration. While creating the characters Billy and his sister Sal, in The Year of Billy Miller, Kevin's children were in the periphery of his thoughts.

Where does he rank in the family with his kids? They may be a little less impressed with having a dad as an author than one may think. He notes that his creations were just books among a sea of other books on the shelf. He surmises that his kids most likely "assumed that everyone's parents made books." What he did for a living was no big deal in their eyes.

Currently, Kevin is working on illustrations for his next book called A House which is a picture book for very young children. Although he has illustrated his own books and invited others, including his wife, to create the imagery for his titles, he has never been tempted to illustrate another author's work. He does keep an eye on other illustrators and has a current admiration for Jon Agee, Lynne Rae Perkins, Marla Frazee, Christian Robinson, and Douglas Florian.

With a career 30 years strong, one cannot help but have occasional retrospective moments. In looking back on his early books, Kevin avoids focusing a critical eye on how he could have done them better. Instead he has a certain reverence for them being "the very best I could at the time." As far as his work goes, he tends to be constantly looking to the future and being most excited about what's next. When put to the task of choosing his favorite books, he cites The Year of Billy Miller and Julius the Baby of the World. He also holds a fondness for his school visits although he does them less frequently these days. Kevin says, "his most wonderful memories are those of walking into a big room filled with young children wearing handmade mouse ears in honor of my books. It always takes my breath away." What an amazing reward for work well done! If Kevin hadn't chosen the path of children's author-illustrator, he imagines he would have been a teacher, adult fiction writer, or a painter although we certainly hope he continues to add to his enchanting collections of children's titles engaging the imagination of future young readers.

Showcasing Andy Griffiths

by Martha Sibert

“Hi, my name is Andy.” This is the first sentence of each book in the best-selling Treehouse series, written by Australian author Andy Griffiths in close collaboration with his wife, editor Jill Griffiths, and illustrator Terry Denton. In the series, fictional characters Andy (the writer) and Terry (the illustrator) create the Treehouse books while living in a fantastic many-storied treehouse. They add another thirteen levels with every new title – so far, they’re up to 130 stories. As each novel begins, Andy, Terry, and their friend Jill set off on a wild adventure, which the boys turn into the manuscript of their next book.

In addition to the Treehouse titles, Griffiths has written easy readers and a number of other books in series, such as The Just! Books, The Bum Books, and The Schooling Around Books. While he enjoyed writing as a child, he didn’t publish his first book (Just Tricking!, 1997) until after he had worked as a punk rock singer/songwriter and high school teacher. While teaching English, he began inventing stories to motivate students who disliked reading and writing. “I learned a lot about performance and being sensitive to an audience from teaching and fronting a band. I enjoy talking to large groups of children, teasing and playing with them—arguing with them about my outlandish claims. And when I come to write, it feels natural to me to address the reader directly.”

He is certainly reaching his audience. The books he creates with the talented Denton have been published all over the world. They’ve garnered dozens of children’s choice awards (as well as other honors). Griffiths attributes this popularity to several factors. First, “the books combine elements of three genres: fantasy, comedy, and adventure, which is reflected in both the text and pictures.” They’re accessible, thanks in part to a multitude of energetic cartoon-style illustrations. At the same time, they have “complicated plots with lots of action and adventure.” A young reader who finishes a hefty Treehouse book can feel a sense of accomplishment. Thirdly, readers of the Treehouse series appreciate the friendship between Andy, Terry, and Jill. It has its ups and downs, but it still gets them through all their crazy adventures.

A sense of play is paramount for Griffiths, whether it’s on the part of the audience or the book creators. While working on a manuscript, he and his team aim to entertain themselves – both as adults and former children. They unleash their imaginations and “follow ideas to their logically illogical conclusions.” This leads to some funny and preposterous situations. In the past, adults have occasionally objected, worrying that readers might actually try the characters’ shenanigans. But he argues, “Fictional characters can have a lot of dangerous fun in books precisely because they are fictional i.e. not real, and, in our experience kids understand this implicitly. It’s part of the game of fiction. They want to go to where the wild things are!”

What comes next? Griffiths is compiling a list of new levels for The 143-Story Treehouse, and he’s researching ghosts for a story set in the haunted house level. How about non-Treehouse projects? “My life is pretty much all Treehouse, all the time! Besides, the treehouse is so elastic and infinitely expandable that it can accommodate almost any subject matter, idea, or genre that I feel like exploring. So, yes, for the moment, it’s treehouse all the way.”

This is a list of highly reviewed and frequently requested titles published in the Spring of 2020 that are a "must have" for every library.

Christian Robinson

by Martha Sibert

Christian Robinson has been very busy since he illustrated his first book – Harlem's Little Blackbird: The Story of Florence Mills, by Renée Watson (2012). To date, in mid-2020, he has published fifteen more books, several of which were on the New York Times Best Illustrated list. He won Caldecott Honor and Coretta Scott King Illustration Honor Awards for the Newbery book Last Stop on Market Street (by Matt de la Peña), as well as a Coretta Scott King Illustration Honor for The Dazzling Life of Josephine Baker (by Patricia Hruby Powell), which also received a Sibert Informational Book Honor.

As it happens, an email from an agent set his productive picture book career in motion. “Long story short, I graduated from animation school and was doing a lot of odd jobs to pay the bills. I kept a blog where I shared personal art projects. One day, I received an email from a children’s book agent asking if I had any interest in making books for kids. My answer was an enthusiastic yes, and I’ve been doing that since. It has been the most fulfilling, life-changing adventure and I am so grateful to Steven Malk for sending that email.”

Robinson’s animation background, including work at Pixar and The Sesame Street Workshop, was good preparation for bringing characters to life in picture books. For additional inspiration, he looks to graphic design and the art and illustrations of the 1950s to 1970s. Are You My Mother? by P.D. Eastman was an early favorite, and he admires books by Roger Duvoisin, Ezra Jack Keats, and Leo Lionni. “I love the illustrated advertisements you’ll see in old Life magazines and the colors of images in old National Geographics. I think what appeals to me about that period is the simplicity and timelessness. I’m influenced by the art of the past, but also do my best to create something that reflects the time we’re in now.”

Finding his own voice has always been part of the process. Recalling his childhood, he says, “[C]reativity was my way of escaping and processing the world around me, and gave me some say in what the world could look like, at least on a piece of paper.” What advice would he offer to his younger artist self? “I would share a quote from Miles Davis, ‘Sometimes you have to play a long time to be able to play like yourself.’ Basically, I would want myself to know that what you’re doing right now is helping you develop as an artist, which is being inspired and influenced by artists who you admire. Know that there is a voice in you that is uniquely your own, and that you should not be afraid to explore that.”

Each illustration project is an opportunity for exploration. “As I familiarize myself with the text, I make storyboards on very tiny post-it notes. I do this because I don’t want to get too attached to one idea. If I make a mistake (and I make many), I can just toss the post-it aside and try again. The final art is very improvised. I always have an idea of what I might do, but I want to leave space to kind of use whatever material feels right for that illustration, which keeps the work exciting for me and hopefully, interesting for the viewer.” He especially enjoys creating the book cover, endpapers, title page, and book case, because the lack of text for those parts gives him free rein to “help shape the world in which the story takes place, and give insights to the reader before they even dive in.”

Robinson usually chooses cut paper and paint for his collage illustrations. “With cut paper, I have a lot of control over how a shape or picture appears, since I use an X-Acto blade, which is very clean and precise. Paint, however, is a little more unpredictable in terms of mixing colors, how it dries, and the energy of the brush strokes. I like that balance of control and chaos.”

Readers often wonder whether artists and authors collaborate during the process of book-making. For their recent title, Just in Case You Want to Fly (their second book together), Robinson and writer Julie Fogliano did most of the work separately. His whimsical illustrations, featuring a variety of children, playfully expand on what it means to fly. “I learned after illustrating the entire book that for her, the idea came from her daughter helping her pack for a trip. She was enthusiastically putting too many things in the suitcase, ‘just in case’ her mom needed them for her trip. Had I known this, the book may have turned out differently. What I love about Julie’s work is that she leaves a lot of space for the reader and illustrator to explore, use their imaginations, and have fun.”

Robinson’s list of publications continues to grow quickly. The forthcoming Milo Imagines the World, by Matt de la Peña, tells a story that’s “deeply personal” for him, about a young artist whose parent is incarcerated. In You Matter, which was released in June, 2020, he illustrated his own text for the first time. “I hope to continue telling my own stories. In the past, I’ve felt more comfortable as a visual storyteller than a writer. However, I feel like with each collaboration I have with authors of books for children, I’m discovering my own voice as a storyteller and beginning to trust that more.”

Now What?

Our local schools will open in approximately one month. As an elementary school librarian, I have no idea what to expect in terms of my physical space or my exact job responsibilities. I am not alone.

As the COVID-19 threat rapidly changes, so do the operating strategies of the over 13,000 public school districts across the country. What we as educators learned last spring was that circumstances can turn on a dime, so we should realize that the best strategies of August may need an overhaul in subsequent months. As librarians, we have two choices: either react to policies when announced or be proactive in anticipating them. Even though we may never practice some of our contingency plans, we will be prepared for many emergencies.

What we don't want to do is simply tweak what we did last year, to become generals planning for the last war as we busily create metaphorical Maginot lines. We can, however, guarantee that this fall, schools will not function as they did in March. But there are so many moving parts it's difficult to get a handle on what we should do. My decision is to focus on one aspect—access.

Start with the coin of the realm, the collection. Anticipate what you will need for the upcoming year with the possibilities of shutdowns and repurposed libraries. Consider lost books from last year, ebooks, interactive books, paperbacks, and databases children can access remotely, even if they are on campus. Next, make plans to order these materials. Yes, money is tight, but focused, detailed budget requests will go further than simple pleas for more money.

If students return to school and the physical library, some practices will be altered. Books cannot simply be returned and immediately checked out; they must languish in quarantine for approximately seventy-two hours and we should plan for that storage. Librarians will also have to modify their circulation systems allowing more circulations per student and increasing circulation time. That way, students won't be penalized for overdue books that are in fact sitting in the library.

Browsing the shelves may be limited, which means an increase in interest inventories; booktalks; collections; reading lists; and bookstagram, Facebook, and Twitter posts to highlight titles so librarians can best serve these students. Many librarians may become roving teachers and bibliophiles, carting lessons and books to various classrooms and circulating items from a laptop. Students must have full access to the catalog with the ability to put books on hold. Consequently, initial library lessons must focus on these login and searching skills, as either a review or an introduction.

Librarians, particularly those in rotation, will have to consider extra circulation stations in order to practice social distancing. In my library, for example, those stations will have to be located in both my office and the workroom. Added stations will require additional scanners, plastic keyboard covers, and wipes/hand sanitizers; all children will have to be able to check out their own books with minimal adult supervision.

Databases used for research are an important part of our collection and students must be able to navigate them independently. Make a recording of how to access those most used. Do the same for outlining the strengths and weaknesses of others. Yes, face to face contact is the best, but if students move to remote learning, or if absent or just need review, you will have provided them with the basic tools they require.

What librarians know best is how to curate and organize material and these recorded infomercials should be easily located by both parents (particularly at the elementary level) and students. Giving parents access to student library records raises questions of privacy, but passwords, such as those for databases, can be available on closed platforms such as a library classroom. Advertise the presence of these aids in newsletters and on your website.

The BFFs of school librarians are their public librarians. If schools close, public libraries may still offer some services. Start the year by asking the neighborhood librarian to greet students, either in person or with a virtual field trip, to remind them of these benefits.

Publishers relaxed their copyrights last year to make books more accessible, but the process was often overwhelming for teachers unfamiliar with imprints and conglomerates. Offer to act as a clearing house for requesting permissions if the situation repeats itself.

And remember, access includes access to you, the librarian. Let parents, teachers, and students know you are from the library and there to help by posting your email and remote office hours in case they need to contact you. In the recession of 2008, U.S. schools lost 20% of their librarians. These positions have not been replaced. We serve vital educational needs. This is the time to showcase our value.

Opening a New Library?

The image shows a bright, modern library interior. A large curved wall with floor-to-ceiling windows is on the left, offering a view of a parking lot with several cars. The room is furnished with dark wood shelving units arranged in a semi-circle. There are several colorful chairs and tables, including a red chair, a purple chair, and a green chair. A red rug is on the floor, and a purple table with various items on it is in the foreground. The overall atmosphere is clean, bright, and inviting.
